"Exploring Union County's past to inform the present and future."

Dear Society Members and Friends

What have you been doing during this health crisis? Gardening? Knitting? Reading? Helping your neighbors? Playing video games? Streaming movies? It doesn't matter. We want to hear from you. Why?

Let's go back 100 years. Coal, steel and the railroads dominated the stock market. Newspaper editors viewed widespread deaths from diphtheria, typhoid and smallpox outbreaks as inevitable as the changing seasons. As horses and cars passed by on unpaved roads, they kicked up particles of dried manure dust that floated into your lungs and onto the food displayed in open sidewalk cases. Where are all these habits, attitudes and institutions now? Most of them are gone because our surroundings, behaviors, and technologies have changed. And many of those changes began as responses to adversity.

Members of earlier generations knew how to handle adversity. The best therapy in the world, they said, is to work. One neighbor constantly reminded me to "keep moving or you will rust fast." Another told me how her family survived during the Great Depression. "Our father left my mother, my two sisters and me, never to see him again. We didn't know we were poor because everyone was poor. Our biggest concern could have been fuel for heat and cooking, but one neighbor always came down the mountain and dropped off a wagon load of dead trees in our yard. We had to cut, split and stack the wood ourselves, but we never froze or starved. Good neighbors. That's how we survived."

History isn't just an idle exercise in hindsight, either memorizing disconnected trivia or surrounding ourselves with old stuff. If we don't share what we've learned from our experiences, it loses any meaning or relevance.

Now is a golden opportunity for everyone, regardless of age, to become part of Union County's history by sharing with the future how you've weathered this attack on our sense of community.

Keep a journal. Tell us how you spend your time while you're locked down. How has this pandemic changed your life? What has remained the same? Has this crisis given you a different perspective or a renewed appreciation? What are your concerns now? Monitor and note how you've rearranged your priorities.

We could then post your photos, artwork, film, poetry, journals, stories, or any other productions in an exhibit, perhaps entitled "Union County Survives!" By sharing your collective presents with posterity, we can ensure the future of both your community and your historical society.

Here's hoping you're all well and that we'll see each other on the other side of this health crisis.
